Too Good to Keep Quiet

The story of the four lepers in 2 Kings 7 paints a powerful picture of what it means to be God's messengers. These men were outsiders, rejected and considered unclean, yet God chose them to be the ones who discovered His miraculous provision. Faced with famine and death, they stepped out in desperation and stumbled upon abundance beyond imagination; food, wealth, and life where only despair had been. At first, they thought only of themselves, but soon they realized, "We are not doing right. This is a day of good news, and we cannot remain silent." Their decision to share brought hope, relief, and restoration to an entire city. In the same way, we too were once spiritually starving and hopeless, yet God has poured out His grace in Christ, giving us forgiveness, reconciliation, and eternal life. These gifts are not meant to be hoarded or hidden; they are given so that we might share them with a world in desperate need. Like the lepers, our calling is not to argue or prove but to witness; to invite others to "come and see" the abundance of God's mercy. As a priestly family, we represent God in the world, reflecting His love, speaking His truth, and carrying His presence into our community. The gospel is too good to keep quiet; it compels us to act, to speak, and to live in such a way that others encounter Jesus through us.

- The provision that was_____was meant to be shared
- The moment the lepers moved from_____ _____they became participants in God's redemptive plan for their city
- We must recognize_____around us
- We must_____our own story
- We are invited to become_____of God's redemptive plan